

Early Marriage

Early marriage refers to marrying before adulthood, often before the age of 18. It can limit education, reduce career opportunities, and increase health risks, especially for girls. Young couples may not be emotionally or financially prepared for family responsibilities. Communities and governments can reduce early marriage by promoting education, enforcing minimum-age laws, and raising awareness about its long-term effects. Supporting young people to complete their education helps them make informed life decisions and build a better future.
